

It's all about the eyes

People often call eyes the windows to the soul. But what exactly do we see when we gaze into the eyes of another person? In fact, the eyes do provide lots of information about another person's emotional state.

When people are sad or worried, they frown their brow, which makes the eyes look smaller. Yet when people are cheerful, we correctly call them "bright eyed". That's because people raise their eyebrows when they're happy, making the eyes look bigger and brighter.

Did you know that the skin around our eyes is said to be seven to ten times thinner and more delicate than the skin on the rest of our face? Which is why we should treat it gently and not rub our eyes - an action that can contribute to wrinkles. Maybe, the worst fact is that as we age, the skin around our eyes get even thinner due to a loss of collagen and elastin.

It's also true that with age or illness, the tiny capillaries in our skin can get weakened and thus leaky. The fluid from these leaky capillaries along with the haemoglobin slowly accumulates below the eyes, thereby forming the look of dark circles. Haemoglobin is the main ingredient in red blood cells and contains a haeme group whose iron atoms bind to oxygen molecules. When oxygen molecules are detached and haemoglobin becomes oxidised, red blood cells turn bluish in colour. That is what happens with dark eye circles.

The skin around our eye area is also highly prone to dryness because it has few sebaceous glands unlike skin around other parts of our face. So on a whole, it has a poor lipid barrier, and more prone to lines forming.

Yet despite all this we still make our eyes work hard ... always looking at screens, driving, reading, bright sunshine, trying to see in the dark ... the list is endless. Fortunately we have some fabulous ways to revitalise your eyes. From simple treatments like threading and tinting to shape and frame the eyes or reflexology which can help relieve congestion giving the eyes their brightness back to more involved treatments that make to feel rested and relaxed.

We need to take care of our eyes they are very precious, and simple everyday routines will help, drinking lots of water, good skin care and regular treatments can help delay ageing and improve the delicate skin around the eyes.

Have a look at our range of superb products and treatments ... if you need some advice please do give us a call. We look forward to welcoming you very soon...
